Dolly Before

When Dolly the Dachshund arrived at Multnomah County Animal Services (MCAS), she exhibited signs of severe animal mistreatment and neglect. But despite her obvious medical problems, MCAS staff and their veterinary hospital team were immediately captivated by Dolly's spirit.

"She was in pretty bad shape when she arrived at the shelter, with a severe case of mange," said Dr. Meghan Romney, head of Shelter Medicine at Multnomah County Animal Services. "Everyone who cared for her was touched by Dolly's sweet disposition and spirit."

An animal care donation fund is being re-named "Dolly's Fund" to help finance medical care for animal patients like Dolly. "We see dozens of neglected and mistreated pets like Dolly every year, some in very serious condition. Concerned pet lovers can contribute to Dolly's Fund to increase our ability to treat more homeless pets in our shelter hospital," says Mike Oswald, director of Multnomah County Animal Services.

Multnomah County Animal Services' animal hospital medical team triages every one of the approximately 8,000 pets that are cared for each year at the shelter. Last year, MCAS officers investigated 279 animal abandonment cases and 704 animal abuse/neglect cases.

"Dolly is expected to make a full recovery, thanks to the efforts of our medical team. And Dolly's Fund will have a huge impact on our efforts to expand the care of medically treatable abandoned animals," stated Dr. Romney.

100% of the money raised by Dolly's Fund will support care for abandoned, abused and neglected animals in need of medical treatment.
